Understanding layers Like many other programs, Photoshop layers are used to divide an image into smaller units. If you look at any image in Photoshop you will see that there are at least a few layers. The layer window is where you define what each layer does and where it appears in your image. To access the layer window, all you

Influence of spatial correlations on spreading dynamics of a granular layer in a quasi-two-dimensional shear flow. We investigate the formation and evolution of a granular layer, as well as the corresponding spreading dynamics, by means of numerical simulations of a quasi-two-dimensional (2D) numerical model of a layer with a periodic boundary condition in the horizontal direction, and an open boundary in the direction perpendicular to the flow. We employ a shearing gas of inelastic hard disks in the absence of gravity and fluid drag. We simulate system-wide granular layers composed of disks with diameters ranging from 5 to 50 disks, while keeping the aspect ratio constant. We introduce two types of initially correlated distributions of particles within the system: a non-correlated random distribution and an initially ordered disk lattice. In the presence of these two forms of correlations, we find that the correlation time is finite when the friction coefficient is less than the threshold value. For higher friction coefficients, the correlation time is either infinite, in which the onset of a macroscopic creep motion occurs, or of the order of the quasistatic relaxation time  $\tau_{\text{q}}$ , in which the system is found to reach the steady-state transport regime. For  $\tau_{\text{q}}(q)$ , the layer width saturates when the thinning of the layer overcomes the fluctuating fluctuations and the formation of the coherent particles. In the presence of both types of correlations, we find that the onset of creep motion occurs in a time of the order of a few correlation times, while the saturation time remains unchanged. The evolution of the layer thickness is slower for the ordered lattice distribution and is faster for the random distribution, similar to the behavior observed for a fluidized monolayer subjected to an external field. Water-in-oil microemulsion-based self-microemulsifying drug delivery system (SMEDDS) for controlled release of diltiazem hydrochloride. The purpose of the present study was to develop a novel water-in-oil microemulsion-based self-microemulsifying drug delivery system (SMEDDS) for the controlled release of diltiazem hydrochloride. The effect of oil-to-surfactant molar ratio (1:0.5; 1:1; 1:1.5; 1:2) and drug-to-surfactant molar

Q: Call function in ViewModel when button is clicked in Xamarin.Forms I have 3 views in a xamarin.forms project where I am using a NavigationPage. Each view displays a button that should call a function in the view model from the main page. How do I best accomplish this? The view should look like: The view model is: private Page _currentPage; public ICommand GoToMainPageCommand { get; set; } public RightSideViewModel() { GoToMainPageCommand = new Command(GoToMainPage); } private async void GoToMainPage() { Content = await Navigation.PushAsync(new MainPage()); } A: Xamarin If you are using Xamarin then you should be using a ViewModel. View Model public class MainViewModel : INotifyPropertyChanged { public event PropertyChangedEventHandler PropertyChanged; private void NotifyPropertyChanged(string propertyName) { if (PropertyChanged != null) PropertyChanged(this, new PropertyChangedEventArgs(propertyName)); } public int MainPage { get; set; } public ICommand GoToMainPageCommand { get; set; } public RightSideViewModel() { GoToMainPage
